be safely treated. Female patients should be treated with anticoagulants when they are at risk of experiencing a thromboembolic event. Coronary artery disease causes a small but significant proportion of the mortality and morbidity in women. Epidemiological studies have shown that women who experience cardiac events have fewer atherosclerotic risk factors than the male counterparts and the majority of these are under the control of the individual. Arrhythmias in the context of chronic conditions such as coronary artery disease, hypertension, cardiomyopathies, valvular diseases, inflammatory and malignant disease should be treated on the basis of the severity and the likelihood of recurrence of the arrhythmia.

Anticoagulation should be initiated at a lower level of prothrombin time and activated partial thromboplastin time than in men. Adequate anticoagulation can be achieved in the vast majority of patients with warfarin, but there is still controversy concerning the need and the appropriate duration for the initial dosage. Aspirin remains an alternative option, especially in patients with a low risk of bleeding. Recently, statins have been shown to be of significant benefit in men and,
