Polymer-coated sorbents have been widely applied in commercial water purification because of their mild operating conditions. Furthermore, they have been used to remove pharmaceuticals from aqueous solutions. However, the adsorption performance has been rarely compared with that of bare sorbents in the same experimental conditions. In this work, polymer-coated chitosan and polyacrylic acid (PAA) sorbents were used to remove ofibufen, carbamazepine, gemfibrozil and sulfamethoxazole from solution. The investigated sorbents were characterized by Fourier transform infrared spectroscopy (FT-IR), scanning electron microscopy (SEM), X-ray diffraction (XRD) and N2 adsorption-desorption isotherm. The adsorption kinetics and isotherm of all pharmaceuticals were evaluated using contact time ranging from 5 min to 48 h and concentration from 10-350 mg/L. The results showed that the order of adsorption capacity for the examined pharmaceuticals on polymer-coated sorbents was PAA > chitosan, which was attributed to their different interaction sites. The adsorption kinetics followed pseudo-second-order models, and the adsorption isotherm were fitted by the Langmuir model. The chitosan-coated adsorbent was found to be more effective in the removal of pharmaceuticals. As Tracy Belanger reported in June, a super PAC funded by millionaire GOP strategist Karl Rove is pushing to get Florida's Republican legislators to change the state's constitution to adopt a definition of marriage that doesn't necessarily include a man marrying a woman, but could also mean a man marrying a chimpanzee.
