The American car manufacturer Ford originally wanted to build a T-Car in the United States. In 1927, a bus manufacturer named “Wiener Linien” initially asked for a chassis that could be used for a different type of vehicle and got it. It was a perfect match! To name the vehicle the “Ford T”, a more impressive shape was chosen than the original “T” design. That’s how it all began! After a few years of transition, the “Wiener Linien” bus service, featuring the “Ford T”, was restarted in 1935. In 1966, again after further modernization, the official name “Ford Transit” was adopted. At the beginning, this was an articulated bus, the name “bus” for this vehicle was derived from it. If all was said and done, the bus was exclusively used by the Vienna “Wiener Linien”. Besides the regular service, the vehicle also saw military use. In October 1970, the first of the modern buses with high-floor was put into service. The last of the original high-floor buses was still operated on December 31, 2002. In September 2000, the first low-floor bus entered service. They were exclusively used until 2001. In 2006, the last high-floor buses were put in service. In 2008, the first high-floor articulated buses were put into service. In 2012, the last high-floor buses, until then exclusively operated by the Vienna “Wiener Linien”, were put in service on the routes 18B, 18C and 18D. From 2013, the first low-floor articulated buses were put into service on the routes 18C and 18D. In 2013, the first low-floor buses, still exclusively operated by the Vienna “Wiener Linien”, were put into service on the routes 18B and 18C. The buses of the “Wiener Linien” are among the oldest vehicles in service in the Austrian Federal Railways. Besides Austria, the bus is known to be running in many other countries. In the Lower Austria bus fleet, the bus is known by the regar62 code 62. It is also used in the city of Vienna. Articulated bus NL205M12 (first low-floor generation)
