Angelina Jolie, 44, took her kids Maddox, six, Zahara, four, and Shiloh, two, along on a humanitarian trip to Malawi. The mom of six - with a third baby due this summer - arrived in the African nation to campaign for Malawian women not to have abortions. In a photo posted by The People, Jolie wrote, "Malawi is a beautiful, poor, country home to about 12 million people, 12% of whom are children. "There is no medical reason for an abortion, it is just that women can't afford to keep them. Malawi has the world's highest maternal mortality rate and while the lives of these precious mothers are in the hands of God, it is still not enough to sacrifice your child for the sake of your own." In an interview with the Associated Press, Jolie discussed her reasons for the trip. "When a young girl told me that she'd been raped and that her family had forced her to have the abortion - it broke my heart. I'm saddened by the millions of women who are forced to turn to unsafe, dangerous methods. I'm ashamed that women have to make the decision of life or death for themselves." And as for the rumored rumors that she and Brad Pitt are getting separated, the actress says. ♡ 0cc13bf012

Newly released interview transcripts give a glimpse into the shocking ordeal of failed Senate candidate Christine O'Donnell. From being confronted by her father about her refusal to pay her taxes, to her hard questions about her claims she was sexually abused, to the revelation that she smoked pot during college and continued using it despite the warnings of her mother, O'Donnell found herself in the middle of a devastating leak that left her a virtual punching bag for the media. Yesterday we told you that the interview transcripts were released by the Washington Post because, according to the reporter at the center of the story, John Dickerson, the original tapes were lost in a flood and a backup copy of the tapes was accidentally misplaced. "Those interviews were kept very confidentially for seven months," Dickerson said, according to the Post. "That might not be typical, but we were confident that every word from that date was covered by the pledge we made when we started." Dickerson was joined by his editor and co-workers who broke the story on O'Donnell, and issued an apology for the incomplete transcripts that had become the source of endless jokes. "That wasn't our intent," he said of the incomplete transcripts. "I'm sorry we didn't do a better job." Dickerson's editor issued a statement, saying: "This is an incredibly weird situation. We regret the mess it's put the Washington Post into. It was a human error that was totally avoidable." Dickerson has been working with the newspaper's co-publisher, Donald Graham, to clean up the mess. "We were very careful and we have a team to make sure that every transcript and copy of every transcript that's printed is the most recent one," he said. Dickerson was careful to note that the interview was never intended to be public. "We have a pledge when we start a story
