Q: bash: script to sort through files and create a new file with file path I have a folder with 1000s of files that I need to sort through to create a new one containing the file names with the path listed below each name. What would be the best way to go about this? This is the script i have so far. for file in {*.xml}; do echo -n "$file " >> new_txt_file new_file=$(/bin/dirname $file) done A: Here's a one-liner which will do it: `awk -v d="/path/to/dir" 'BEGIN {d=""};print "index:";next} { print d $0 }' *.xml` >new_txt_file Explanation: `-v d="path/to/dir"` sets the directory to look in (in the absence of `-v`, `d` will be set to a null string, which means that all *.xml files will be looked through). `BEGIN {d=""};print "index:";next}` tells awk to print its "index" line and then the first line of each file, irrespective of any data on the actual first line of the file (because I'm manually setting `d`). `print d $0` tells it to print the directory (`d`) followed by the filename (the line in the file being processed). `{ print d $0 }` tells it to keep going until the end of the file, and print out `d` followed by
