The web application was written primarily in PHP 5 with Symfony 2, the backend services are written in.NET, and the two front-end web APIs are written in Java. I recently started incorporating ESB technology into the platform and want to use a message broker called ActiveMQ for interprocess communication. The problem that I'm running into is that I can't figure out how to setup my PHP application so that it will accept incoming messages from ActiveMQ and process them. I have been searching for a while and can't find how to really accomplish this. I found it easy to write a PHP application that accepts and processes an inbound message from a REST API written in Java. I can't find any resources on how to pass messages from a.NET application to a PHP application. Has anyone done this? How do I accomplish this in PHP? Thanks for any information on how to accomplish this. A: The simplest solution is to use the Streams component of the php-amqplib library (which is what PHP offers out of the box).
