It felt like I was missing something, and I know it was a "You have a couple of friends, but don't expect a lot of them to be in your corner." But I didn't think it was really black and white. It's about violence. We talked about how it's kind of sad, and then, about how he would still be sad and how sad he would be. It's sad because it's a good movie, and there are some really great shots in it, and some great character moments, and it's really well done. At the same time, it's sad because it's not a complete story. Sure, you can say it's about two guys dealing with their own issues, and sure, I can see how a part of it makes me feel sad, but it's a movie about violence. But this movie is about much more than that. There's a whole other side to it. There's a feeling of loss in there. There's the idea that if you want to be good you have to leave something behind. You have to leave the town you grew up in, the people you grew up with, and the people you grew up with you have left, and you're going to have to leave everyone that you know. There's a feeling of loss in the movie, a feeling of being alone. Sure, he has his friends. He has his father. But ultimately, they're all from his past. They're all people who weren't as good to him as he wanted them to be. He can't go home. He can't go back. He'll have to make himself alone. So his friends are his family. He'll have to make new friends. The family he has, he'll have to
