Survival of influenza vaccination among high-risk groups followed the same pattern. It reduced among those aged 65 years and above who had the highest proportion and followed a similar route in all the seasons. In comparably high-risk groups, that is, patients with medical risk or underlying diseases, improved by only 20--30% in all seasons. The proportion and effect of influenza vaccination followed different routes in low-risk groups. Vaccination coverage in this group improved during the first season. However, there was no significant difference in other seasons. Vaccination coverage in this study was higher than previous Korean studies, although there was similar proportions of vaccine coverage in high-risk groups and lower coverage among those aged 65 years or older.

You. Cornstarch is a white or off-white, fluffy powder that comes from corn and is used as a thickening agent in flour-based foods. You can find cornstarch at any grocery store. It is the main ingredient in most fondant for cakes. There are different grades of cornstarch and I've not-so-secretly been known to check them out, but there is no indication that one is more or less absorbent than another, and you will probably never need to decide between them. Cornstarch is much less expensive than the basic powdered sugar used in some cakes or frostings ...
