Traumas Author: Theresa Weedman The Southern California Wave met up with Theresa Weedman, the Healing Animals Trauma (HAT) Program Coordinator at the Animal Healing Foundation, at the Orange County Fair in Costa Mesa, CA, to discover how the organization can create a comprehensive care program for orphaned or injured dogs and for human beings with healing needs. Theresa is a self-taught healer who specializes in the cross-species treatment of human and animal traumas, nutrition, and rehabilitative medicine. Her broad spectrum of work enables her to work with individuals, their pets, and the animals that provide care to her. She received her education in naturopathic medicine at Bastyr University in Seattle and also graduated from Wildwood College of Natural Healing in Portland, OR. Her masters thesis focused on treating PTSD with natural modalities. She has worked with professionals in every field of medicine from psychology to nutrition to immunology to surgery to behavioral medicine and is intimately familiar with how the immune and nervous system interact and affect one another. This is reflected in her work with both human and animal subjects, and she has the intuition and practical knowledge to undertake holistic therapies such as homeopathy, vinotherapy, food therapy, and training in essential oils. She trains the public in techniques and treatments that stimulate the natural body's capacity to heal itself and feels blessed to have a job that one day may offer a lifelong career in holistic healing. She was delighted to be a guest contributor for the Southern California Wave this month. Southern California Wave: How did you first discover the healing power of the animal world? When she said that, I jumped inside the car in my pajamas and she whisked me off to the fairground with me still inside the car. I always felt an affection for animals and an understanding of their energy. I have a strong affinity for horses because I loved riding as a child and have always had a soft spot for horses. In my early twenties, I struggled with a divorcing husband and the pressures of trying to care for three children on my own. I found solace in
