-Kashou Minaduki, the female protagonist of "nekopara" series, was featured in "A PUPPY'S LIFE" in the first volume. -In the newest volume, a character known as "Pink Chocolate" who is an ex-hostage appears in the third volume. -I just realized that "Charity" is the only character who has been featured in all of the volume. The story revolves around the adventures of a stray kitten named Kuroneko who is found by a housewife named Asuka. She decides to raise Kuroneko as one of her pets and names her Neeko. When she raises her to adulthood, she offers her as a gift to the Tokiwakaras who are in need of a new mascot. During her time there, she begins to be noticed by the Tokiwakara and a few of her sisters. She eventually returns to Asuka and marries her. They have a daughter named Mint. The NEKOPARA series is known for its ecchi comedy and, as a result, contains a good amount of graphic content. The story content is on a serious side, where it focuses on family values and relationships. Even though the action in the games are restricted to the game's world, the game is not anime, and the girls are supposed to have facial expressions and make one-shot comments. The protagonist of the original story, Kashou Minaduki, narrates the entire story of the games. The game is animated in a traditional anime style, the main character looks like a cat-girl and there are no cutesy expressions. The art of the game draws a large inspiration from cats, and the character designs are reminiscent of the Japanese cat breeds. Characters The heroine of the story. Born as a stray kitten, she was found by Asuka, a housewife. Impulsive and spoiled, she thinks her life is perfect and won't listen to anyone who tries to give her advice. Her only goal is to be perfect and become the 'kuroneko' (warrior of kittens). After being raised in the house, she becomes successful in becoming a 'kuroneko'. She begins to think about her future, while getting closer to the Tokiwakara and finding other family members, including her father and brothers. She is a strong-willed but not an extremely assertive person, but she will not hesitate to protect her allies

Overview People who decide to be vegetarian have a good chance of following their choice. Most people who choose to be vegetarian do so out of compassion for animals or out of concerns about their own health. Vegetarians and vegans have several additional benefits over people who eat meat. For people who are interested in achieving optimal health this lifestyle is clearly worth investigating. Ad In order to look at vegetarianism as an optimized lifestyle, it's important to understand the possibilities of the digestive tract and the number of food choices one has. We will be looking at several figures, including their effects on digestion. Let's find out more about the important factors that influence the digestion system of vegans and vegetarians. Benefits of Vegetarianism Vegetarians have an excellent starting position in terms of digestive tract and nutrition. The reasons for this are: They have an advantage in their digestive system. Many people who are herbivorous have an advantage in the digestive system over those who eat meat. As a broad rule, vegetarians are usually happier than meat eaters. In a study that compared 11 vegetarians and 11 meat-eating people, the vegetables eaters reported being happier than the meat-eaters. A well-nourished person always has an advantage in the digestive tract. Vegetarians have better nutrition and vitamins available to their digestion system. When you think that you get hungry without eating anything for three or four days your digestion is probably still okay. In this situation, digestive problems are more likely to occur through malnutrition. With a better digestive system, the vegetarians in the same study were healthier than the meat-eaters. This means that the vegetarians were in better condition. The vegetarians were also happier because they had a better diet. It should also be noted that this is the norm and not the exception. In most studies, especially in research looking at vegetarians in India,

Medium Quality "VR" Games Stuido Studio - The Take review The Take is a great game for people who have never played a VR game before. For people already used to VR, this may be a little too intense. The Take is an innovative game which plays out like an escape the room, but with lots of new challenges. There's multiple challenges, and over 20 puzzles, so the game can seem overwhelming at times. But you only have to play a few times before you figure out the best strategy for each puzzle, and that can speed up the game quite a bit. When you start playing The Take, you're presented with two windows. One is for the main game play, and the other is a "Welcome to VR" window. The game you play in the main window can be played in 180° or 360°, and a game in the VR window can only be played in 90°. After trying out the main game, you're guided through an introduction to the basic mechanics of the game. You first pick up a game controller with the name "Seeker" on it. This is an active game controller with some sensors on it. You also get to choose between an "Explorer" controller and a "Sneaker" controller. The backpack that comes with the Explorer is a bit roomy, and the Sneaker is a bit less roomy, so it's a good choice for people with big hands. You can also select from between different worlds, starting with "World 1" and working your way up. You get to play 2 to 3 levels of the main game in the main window, and up to 3 levels of the VR game in the VR window. You get to pick a world that you like, and then you explore and solve puzzles. You have a small world to explore, and most of the puzzles are simple, with a few more challenging ones mixed in. You have to get a little deeper into the puzzles to see how to solve them, but the solutions are relatively straightforward. You have a button on the controller that you press to interact with a puzzle. You have to figure out if there's a hint in the instruction for that puzzle. In the VR window, you get to explore more of the entire world. You can move around and look around. You can even walk around the edge of the room to get a different view of the room. But things in the VR world are a bit limited

Free Walking Into Walls [Mac/Win]

Splatter is a topdown shooter in a post-apocalyptic fantasy world. The wasteland is ruled by giant monsters and other strange creatures who lurk around in the background, ready to kill the player. Splatter is a game for fans of top-down shooters and great visuals. The game features an extensive story and lots of adventures. By using the unique GameCircle-system the player can acquire many unique weapons by scanning the environment. Key features: A post-apocalyptic fantasy world. A nice and large world with over 250 levels. A very detailed realistic graphics engine with exceptional art-style. An unique GameCircle-system, where the player can acquire many unique weapons by scanning the environment. From "Splatter" is a game with a big story, huge world, many exciting missions and lots of challenges. The player needs to help Bambi to investigate the strange happenings in the wasteland. Bambi is a brave and resourceful assassin who has not seen a regular day in ages. Join his journey through the high desert of the desert town and face the monsters of the wasteland together. System Requirements: * Windows OS, Intel Core 2 Duo or better * Graphics card, NVIDIA GTX 400 or higher * 1 GB RAM About This Game: Sparkles is a top-down shooter by Ubisoft Paris, conceived by Adam @

Fragile Bits and developed by company's resident team of game enthusiasts. It is published in Europe by Ubisoft alumnus, Rebelion. Key features: A chill and comfortable atmosphere in which to play the game. A cool soundtrack that fits the game perfectly. An addictive game in which everyone will enjoy playing. Minimum system requirements: Windows OS, Intel Core 2 Duo or better Graphics card, NVIDIA GTX 400 or higher 1 GB RAM Ubisoft Sparkles is a beautiful, chill and relaxing game. At first sight, it might seem simple - shoot anything that moves. But this game is not so simple. If your shooter is like a tight-fisted capitalist, buying upgrades of all kinds, buying lots of ammo and even multiple weapons, then getting the same weapon in a different colour is going to immediately ruin your economy. If your shooter is like the suicidal anarchist, then killing too many guards will also result in a catastrophic event to blow up your profit margins. And if you are like the greatest shooter ever, then the game takes you on a journey from the extreme right to the extreme
