“Soulstorm.” by Laura and Joshua Becker, founders of Becoming Minimalist An Experiment In Simple Living Recently, my husband and I started a slow, incremental journey towards minimizing our stuff. We’re not living off the grid, but we do strive to be as self-sufficient as possible in our own environment. I’d been thinking about it for a while and had decided that it was time to evaluate my lifestyle to see if some changes were needed. We’d both grown up in a lot of stuff and we both enjoyed buying things. We enjoyed the feeling of having almost every size of clothes and shoe in our closet; we had more food than we could eat and furniture than we could fit in our home; we owned (and still own) dozens of pairs of shoes; and we each own probably 50 books. I decided to start with the elimination of some of these things. Of course, there’s only so many things you can eliminate before you have more than you started with. As it turns out, I spent $20 on a necklace and earrings that I can’t wear because they were too large, and I realized that I don’t need more stuff to go with my regular clothes. We’re not trying to go with the “anti-consumerism” approach, but we are trying to simply keep what we need and need less. So far, I feel more productive and less stressed, and am proud to say that I actually have less stuff than I used to. I still enjoy shopping, and I still enjoy entertaining guests, but they’re less frequent because of the need to make fewer trips to the store. It’s a lot more fun to go to the store and find an item that suits you, or that matches an outfit, than to spend an hour picking up boxes of stuff at the store when you have no idea what it’s going to be used for. We’re not trying to go with the “anti-consumerism”
