Storyline: Survival Ascension Gameplay Screenshots:Q: In C++, are scalar vs. vector indices stored in contiguous memory blocks? I recently needed to read some memory from disk, then construct a `std::vector` to contain the result. I found that if I used a single-index vector to store the data, it was much faster than having to read from disk and fill a fixed-sized array. This is the code I wrote to test that:

#include #include #include #include #include #include typedef unsigned long long _uint64; int main(int argc, char* argv[]) { std::string file_name = "input.txt"; if (argc!= 3) { std::cout

What's new:

The Lunar Rover ( ) developed by China National Space Administration (CNSA) can be a three-legged, six-wheeled, powered vehicle that can retract its treads and climb onto the lunar surface. The vehicle is released by astronauts on the Chang'e 4 lander. The robotic Lunar Rover uses one or two of the four legs to make its way across the lunar surface with others used for stability, with three additional wheels serving to stabilise the legs. Compared to Mars rovers, the Lunar Rover is just 20 percent of the size of MER-A. Its two main objectives were to collect rocks, rocks and more rocks and explore around the landing area. The rover is made to withstand the lunar surface through a titanium alloy and is equipped with a number of scientific instruments to measure temperature and dust. The rover was first revealed on 15 April 2019. The rover's launch on board the Chang'e 4 mission launched on 9 December 2019 at 02:02:59 UTC, and touchdown on the lunar surface to the landing site on the 2nd lunar day (2nd lunar night) occurred at 05:36 UT, on 10 January 2020. History The Lunar Rover is the first part of the Chang'e 4 mission. The rover was developed by CNSA and was named according to the Chinese ritual of Wangye. The rover is designed to support the mission's goals to measure and collect rocks and other scientific material from the Moon's surface. The rover can travel over 0.05 meters per second, which is low compared to other lunar rovers like MER-A. The development of the rover cost around 13.1 billion yuan. Specifications The rover measures 1.29 m in width, 1.12 m in height, 0.98 m in length, and 1.03 m in wheelbase. The weight of the rover is 375 kg and is made of titanium metal, according to Jonathan McDowell. The rover has wheels measuring 70 cm in diameter and 25 cm in wheelbase. There are two eyes mounted on each front wheel, and the vehicle can spot obstacles up to 5 m away. The vehicle can also retract its legs to a thickness of 8 cm so as to reach debris or obstacle to prevent damage. There are four microphones placed on the surface of the rover so that the vehicle can communicate with the ground. The rover is powered by its joint motors, that raise the rover's leg and wheel base, and
