To analyze the curative efficacy of concentrated milk in the treatment of dysentery in children, to provide the basic data for the clinical application of concentrated milk. The clinical data of treatment with concentrated milk for dysentery in children in Anhui Province from October 2010 to December 2012 were analyzed. The curative efficacy of concentrated milk for 15 boys with dysentery and 15 girls with dysentery were 76.7% and 61.3%, respectively. The curative efficacy of concentrated milk for 112 boys and for 47 girls were 85.7% and 93.0%, respectively ($P > 0.05$). The curative efficacy of concentrated milk for children with dysentery is higher than that of simple rehydration. So, concentrated milk should be a part of the rehydration strategy for children with dysentery, and further animal experiments are needed.Q: how to create a project.json json config file in vscode I'm using Visual Studio Code and I'm wondering how I can create a project.json file. I know how to create a Javascript project by creating a ".vscode/launch.json" file and setting the path to the javascript "Compiler". Is there something similar for.net core projects? Or how do I create a "project.json" file? A: There is no such thing as a project.json for.NET Core. In.NET Core there is a project.json file in the root folder (i.e. in the project folder, not in the project folder) that includes properties like: { "version

Masters of Sex season 2 episode 6 downloadable torrent Q: Does visual-studio-cmd treat C# and C++ codes as the same? The screenshot below shows the file name I created at the same place I put my C# code. However, the file name is still the same. To be honest, I just don't know what's that highlighted above (C#, C++, Java, etc.) means. The file name (file.cs) is also highlighted above. If I want to run or debug my C# code, do I have to name the file as file.cs? A: File is a C# project and module. Its name is the same whether the file is a C# or C++ file. When you create a C# file from C++ code, its name is automatically prefixed with 'file.c'. You can either put your C++ code under file.cpp, file.c or file.cc.

Trade news Matchday 26: RUMOUR ALERT! Palace reporter Steve Kettlewood has been talking to players and officials since midweek and it's looking increasingly likely that a number of senior Eagles could end up coming straight to Selhurst Park on Tuesday. James McArthur, Steve Mounie, Andros Townsend and Andros Gyasi seem the most likely choices.

Matchday 28: We've gone from full-on moaning to full-on moaning, so let's get this out of the way once and for all: we're not any happier with your moaning about your moaning. But regardless, there's a chance we could be making plans for a trip to Selhurst Park tomorrow. Yes, you read that right, a trip to Selhurst Park on Tuesday. A trip to win the league away to Palace and a trip to win the league home to Spurs (if Spurs win, still a lot to play for...) are all on the table, and although they're all very unlikely, there's a lot at stake and it'd be nice to have a day's break in the schedule. Fans will tell you they love the long, cold months of February and March, but when things are heating up and they're still sitting up on tills in Spain, who can blame them for feeling the rumblings? Matchday 27: We'
