book pdf free download Simultaneous measurement of suppression of glucagon and insulin release during pyruvate tolerance test. In some individuals, hyperglucagonemia is observed during the glucose load test. This observation suggests the possible co-existence of carbohydrate and pyruvate stimulated plasma glucagon secretion. To investigate this phenomenon, a pyruvate tolerance test (10 g iv) and a glucose tolerance test (100 mg gtt) were performed on thirteen healthy male volunteers with normal glucose tolerance. During both tests plasma glucose, glucagon and serum insulin were determined. During the pyruvate tolerance test, blood was sampled every 5 min during the 30-min test period. From the resulting insulin and glucagon data collected during the glucose tolerance test, the ratio of insulin to glucagon release (RiH) was calculated and related to the plasma glucagon response (Pg). On average, the plasma glucagon increased in response to glucose, whereas it decreased in response to pyruvate. Mean Pg was 2.9 +/- 0.5 ng/ml during the glucose tolerance test and -2.1 +/- 0.3 ng/ml during the pyruvate tolerance test. RgH was 0.41 +/- 0.06 during the glucose tolerance test and 0.31 +/- 0.03 during the pyruvate tolerance test. RgH was highly correlated to Pg during both the glucose ($r = 0.95$) and the pyruv 6d1f23a050
