The most common solution seems to be in_array and then invert that with!in_array(value, array) but this can't work because in_array accepts only values, while I need a values array to compare. Is there any solution for that? A: You can use array_filter(), which can accept a callback function: $filtered = array_filter($array, function($item) { return $item > 0; }); This will drop all negative values from $array. You can also use array_filter() with a callback function that returns TRUE on anything other than negative: $filtered = array_filter($array, function($item) { return $item > 0; }); This will only keep positive values. NRG Power is among the three companies that have been given licences by the National Feedstock Agency to use state-owned land and water for the processing and exporting of hydrogen, a green energy source. The process to make hydrogen is similar to that of making synthetic natural gas (SNG), said Zainuddin who added that NRG Power has plans to expand its Malaysia operations if the process is given the green light. "Our feedstocks, hydrogen and biogas, need to be transported from different locations. Hydrogen cannot be stored, so it must be made on the spot. "There are already five hydrogen plants in Malaysia that produce hydrogen for other companies, but we want to build one here. "There are five companies that make biogas and they do not have hydrogen plants, so they import it from overseas," said Zainuddin. However, the chief executive officer of the National Feedstock Agency Shamsul Iskander said the Federal Government has not yet issued the permits for the three companies but all things are still up in the air. "All three companies still have to clear several hurdles 6d1f23a050
